

How to Make a Metal Crochet Bracelet

with Jess Van Den of Epheriell.com

- 1. Cut three 1 metre pieces of your chosen 26 gauge wire.
- 2. Tie an open knot at one end (you should be able to fit your pinkie finger through the opening of the knot) leaving a tail of no less than 6cm.
- 3. Take a crochet hook, thread it through the knot, and proceed to chain 18-20.
- 4. Repeat with all three pieces of wire.
- 5. Take your three pieces of crocheted wire and flatten them. Line them up on the table so all three are flat and facing the same direction.
- 6. Put the tails at one end together and twirl them so they come together as one piece of wire (like you would twirl hair around your finger).
- 7. Anchor your twirled end (perhaps get a friend to hold it, or put the end under something heavy) and proceed to plait the three pieces of crocheted wire together loosely.
- 8. When you reach the other end, repeat the twirling process with the three ends. You may need to trim them – remember to cut them no shorter than 6cm.
- 9. Take one end and form a loop – again, about the size your pinkie finger could fit into.
- 10. Wind the end of the loop tightly around its base 2-3 times. Cut off any excess and use a tool to tightly clamp the ends down into the bracelet at the base of the loop.
- 11. Slide a lobster clasp onto the other end, and repeat the above process OR repeat the above loop-making process and then add a lobster clasp to one loop using a jump ring.
- 12. Put your bracelet on, then adjust to fit. You can stretch or squeeze the bracelet so that it fits your wrist perfectly.
- 13. Wear and enjoy! Share photos of your bracelet on social media using the hashtag #Epheriell so I can check them out :)
